

THE OLA ROLLÉN CASE

Greenbridge Investors

Q: Who has invested in Greenbridge? Are there any Hexagon employees aside from Ola Rollén and Melker Schörling that have invested in Greenbridge?

A: One should remember that the individuals and companies that have invested in Greenbridge may exercise the right to remain anonymous. Such investments are private and unrelated to Hexagon. It's at each individual's full discretion as to whether he/she wants to disclose ownership.

After it was announced that Melker and Ola had decided to form Greenbridge, wishes to invest were expressed by several individuals including friends and family and a few employees at Hexagon. It was very encouraging to receive such trust as investors.

To ensure transparency, a set of rules for Hexagon employee investors was established. Along with guidelines to avoid the risk of conflicts of interest between Hexagon and Greenbridge, an investor who is also a Hexagon employee cannot have any operational involvement in Greenbridge.

The Chairman of the Board for Hexagon also has the final say about any Greenbridge investments that might conflict with Hexagon's business interests.

Apart from Ola, Johnny Andersson is the only Hexagon employee who has had a role within Greenbridge. Johnny and Ola have worked together since 2001. When Ola had the chance to set up Greenbridge he asked Johnny to advise on proper legal structure set up and act as the secretary to Greenbridge's Board of Directors. Being the secretary to the Greenbridge Board requires Johnny Andersson to be present in a few board meetings per year, similar to that of an external board assignment. This has been approved by the Board of Directors of Hexagon since Johnny Andersson also holds the position as General Counsel for Hexagon.

The ownership held by Hexagon employees in Greenbridge, apart from Ola Rollén, is insignificant and amounts, all in all, to less than three per cent of the company.

In summary, a few Hexagon employees decided to privately invest in Greenbridge. These employees are only passive investors and hence do not have any operational involvement in Greenbridge.

Q: Are any of Hexagon's Board members (apart from Ola Rollén and Melker Schörling) investors in Greenbridge?

A: No

Q: Isn't the information about other Hexagon employees being investors in Greenbridge relevant for the market?

A: No, their investment is private and no different to any other private investments they may have. As stated previously, they are passive investors and not operationally involved in Greenbridge.
